Middle school musical gives students a chance to shine

By LIZ SKILLERN
lizskillern2@gmail.com

For many middle school students, finding time for one activity can be challenging enough. For the students involved in this year's Shenandoah Community Schools middle school musical, finding time for theater while juggling sports and other activities became part of the challenge.

But according to director Julie Murren, the students' dedication helped make Junie B. Jones Jr. a memorable production.

The musical follows Junie B. Jones, the outspoken and energetic first grader from the popular children's book series, as she navigates school, friendships, and the ups and downs of growing up. Filled with humor, music, and plenty of personality, the production gave the middle school students an opportunity to step into the shoes of younger characters while taking on a large-scale theatrical production.

Murren said she chose Junie B. Jones Jr. for this year's musical in part because it is one of her favorite shows. She also has a personal connection to the production, having played the title role when Southwest Iowa Theatre Group produced the musical five years ago. "The show is high energy with fun music, and these kids took that energy to new heights in this show!" Murren said.

She also felt the familiar title character would be a good fit for the students. "The title character is a beloved children's novel character, and it was really motivating for the students to be able to connect that character to the stage," she said. "It also gave them the opportunity to be truly childlike, while at the same time showing their growing maturity in such a large-scale production."

The production involved a large group of students both on and off the stage. Forty-five middle school students performed onstage, while another 25 worked behind the scenes on stage crew, lights and sound, set building and painting, publicity, and house management. Three high school students also helped with lights and sound, stage management, and student direction.

With so many students involved, scheduling was one of the biggest challenges. Many students were balancing rehearsals with volleyball, soccer, and other activities. Some would arrive at rehearsal directly from a sporting event or leave rehearsal to head to another activity.

"They worked hard and were perseverant, even when they were exhausted from coming straight from volleyball or heading to soccer right after," Murren said.

Students involved in the production also had to learn lines, choreography, and music outside of rehearsal time.

The large number of students interested in the production presented another challenge. Murren said she did not want to turn anyone away, so she found creative ways to involve students throughout the production. "They were able to see different aspects of the theater process, and I hope that was really valuable to them," she said.

Murren said she was particularly proud of the students' perseverance and the improvement she saw during the final week of production. "There was incredible improvement in the last week of production, and I couldn't be happier with the result," she said.

For Murren, one of the most rewarding moments comes when the students finally perform in front of an audience. "The first time we performed in front of an audience is always the moment that I can tell the kids are proud of what they have done," she said. "When I can see that they are proud of their own accomplishments, that is the moment it really hits home for me."

Hearing students talk about wanting to participate in another production is another sign that the experience was worthwhile. "They made good memories, and that is always my number one goal," Murren said.

Beyond learning lines, songs, and choreography, Murren hopes students gained confidence through their theater experience. "I always love seeing kids develop a new confidence and belief in themselves," she said. "Theater is such a great way to help students to develop this skill."

Murren admitted she initially wondered whether middle school students would embrace the opportunity to play characters as young as Junie B. Jones. "I was honestly a bit worried that they wouldn't want to play 6-year-old characters," she said. "I wondered if they would think it was too immature for them since they are in 5th-8th grades."

In the end, she said the students were enthusiastic about the production and embraced the experience.

Although Junie B. Jones Jr. was Murren's first middle school musical, she brought considerable directing experience to the production. She previously directed four elementary musicals and one high school play for Shenandoah Community Schools, in addition to her involvement in community theater. Junie B. Jones Jr. marks Murren's 44th directed production.

For Murren, however, the number of shows is less important than what students gain from each experience. "I hope the kids had a truly memorable experience and want to come back for more in the future," she said.

And if students leave the stage with greater confidence, new friendships, and a desire to do it again, Murren considers the production a success.

Pella celebrates Manufacturing Month by investing in Page County's workforce and future talent pool

At Pella Corporation, every window and door is made to order, requiring manufacturing operations that can deliver choice and customization without sacrificing quality or reliability. This people-powered work is central to Pella's 2026 Manufacturing Month theme, "Powered by People: Connected to What's Next," as the company's Shenandoah plant continues to invest in its employees, strengthen connections with the community and create pathways for future manufacturing talent.

Growing Careers, Close to Home

As a major employer in the Shenandoah area, Pella is focused on developing homegrown talent and creating long-term career paths for local team members – each of whom are encouraged to identify opportunities, test ideas and improve processes, turning firsthand experience into practical solutions. Through job shadowing, focused development pathways, standardized training and leadership practice, Shenandoah team members can build new skills and advance – with employees across Pella having moved from hourly manufacturing roles into department management, plant leadership and corporate positions.

Educating the Next Generation of Manufacturing Leaders

On Friday, Oct. 16, Pella's Shenandoah facility welcomed approximately 130 students from Shenandoah, Clarinda, and Essex for a hands-on look at modern manufacturing. Students worked to build phone amplifiers, made from wood parts produced in the Shenandoah plant, while team members gave a presentation about what Pella does and the types of jobs available at the facility. The visit closed with a modified tour of the factory, giving students a firsthand look at how Pella's windows and doors are made.

The annual event helps introduce students to manufacturing careers close to home and gives Pella an opportunity to connect with future talent while celebrating Manufacturing Month. Photos from the event are below.

A Committed Community Partner

Pella's presence in Shenandoah extends well beyond the plant floor. Through the Pella Rolscreen Foundation, the nonprofit arm of Pella Corporation, the company recently awarded a $20,000 grant to the Clarinda Foundation to support HVAC improvements at Clarinda schools. The grant reflects the Foundation's ongoing commitment to the communities where Pella team members live and work.

"Our Shenandoah team members are the reason we can deliver on our promise to customers every day, and investing in this community is just as important to us as what happens on our plant floor," said Jason Goltz, plant manager at Pella's Shenandoah facility. "Whether it's supporting local schools through the Pella Rolscreen Foundation or welcoming students into our facility to see what a career in manufacturing looks like, we're building the kind of community and the kind of workforce that will carry Shenandoah's manufacturing future forward."

Throughout October, Pella is bringing "Powered by People: Connected to What's Next" to life through student shadow days, team member events and content highlighting team members and their work – including in Shenandoah, where these efforts connect directly to the community investments and education initiatives above.

Clarinda roots inspire Andy Nordland's journey from story hour to writing novels

By LIZ SKILLERN
lizskillern2@gmail.com

A childhood love of storytelling, lessons from athletics, and the influence of mentors helped lead Clarinda native Andy Nordland to publish two novels.

Long before Andy Nordland became a published author, he was a young Clarinda boy walking to the Lied Public Library for story hour. Now, with two novels to his name, Nordland has returned to the library that helped spark his love of storytelling.

Nordland, who grew up on a family farm near Clarinda, recently visited the library to talk about his books, Hybrid and No Weak Link, and the experiences that eventually led him to become a novelist.

Some of his earliest memories of the library date to the early 1970s, when he and his friend Ryan would walk several blocks to attend story hour with Mrs. Davidson, a retired elementary school teacher. "I just remember how she was so good with us," Nordland said. "She was able to just kind of mesmerize you with the way she talked and presented the stories."

The experience left a lasting impression on the young boy, who also enjoyed having stories read to him by his older sister. "I was kind of getting lots of stories at that age and being read to," he said. "That's always stuck with me."

Although Nordland enjoyed writing as a young person, a career in finance, insurance, and commercial real estate took him in a different direction. He graduated from Clarinda High School in 1986 and Iowa State University in 1990 with a degree in finance. He also coached college athletics at William Jewell College and the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

His first novel, Hybrid, began taking shape in 2003. The story follows Tim Jepsen, a high school senior in Clarinda in February 1986. Tim is a talented athlete and student, but he faces challenges familiar to many teenagers, including self-confidence, friendships, and conflict with his father. He also dreams of a new life in California and hopes a girl he admires will notice him.

Nordland wrote the book and shared it with his wife and a few others, but the manuscript eventually found its way into a closet.

His second novel, No Weak Link, followed a similar path. The story centers on Dave Sunderman, a successful young attorney in San Francisco who returns to the Midwest with his fiancée to introduce her to the people who helped shape his life. Their journey takes them through Kansas City, Maryville, and ultimately Clarinda.

The title reflects the importance of those relationships, Nordland said. Each mentor played a role in helping Dave overcome difficult circumstances and reach his goals. "If it wasn't for each one of those people in his life, he probably wouldn't have ended up where he is now," Nordland said.

Both books explore the importance of family, friendship, and mentorship, themes Nordland hopes readers will carry with them.

He said the characters are not based on any one person, but rather are combinations of people he has known and experiences he has had. While the settings are familiar to southwest Iowa readers, the stories are fiction, not memoir. "I think that's the biggest thing I hope people take away," he said. "You just have to keep fighting and every day try to get a little bit better."

Nordland's own path to publication was shaped by a group of writers he joined after retiring from his primary career. He and his wife, Karla, now live in Pacific Grove, California, where he attends a weekly writers group at the Carmel Foundation.

Members of the group encouraged him to bring the manuscripts out of the closet and share them with a wider audience. "If I hadn't started going to this writers group, I would have never done it," he said. "They'd still be sitting in the closet."

Hybrid was published in October 2025, followed by No Weak Link in June 2026.

Nordland said the discipline he developed as an athlete has helped him as a writer. When he began writing Hybrid, he worked for 70 consecutive days, producing about 1,000 words a day. "You just can't take time off," he said. "You have to push every day."

He sees similarities between the demands of athletics and writing, including the need for focus, persistence, and the willingness to keep going when motivation fades.

Nordland also credits people who encouraged him along the way. As a young college student, he wrote an essay about his grandfather, a Clarinda dentist who had a significant influence on his life. The essay helped him place into a higher-level English course at Iowa State.

Later, an instructor praised his writing, telling him that his work made the teacher think about things in a different way. "It was the first time a teacher had ever said anything like that to me," Nordland said. "It stuck with me."

That influence of mentorship is reflected throughout both novels.

Nordland hopes his books remind readers that people who appear to have everything going for them may still face struggles, and that the encouragement of others can make a meaningful difference.

The books are available through Amazon by searching for Andy Nordland. He also shares weekly short stories, personal reflections, and excerpts from his books on his Facebook page, AndyNordlandWrites.

Clarinda Regional Health Center welcomes pediatrician Dr. Tabitha Wilson

Clarinda Regional Health Center (CRHC) is pleased to announce the addition of Tabitha Wilson, MD, to its medical team beginning in mid-November, expanding access to pediatric care for families in Clarinda and surrounding communities.

Dr. Wilson will provide comprehensive pediatric care for infants, children, and adolescents, including well-child visits, immunizations, sick visits, preventive care, and management of ongoing health concerns.

Having grown up in a rural farming community, Dr. Wilson understands the importance of having access to quality healthcare close to home. Her desire to give back to rural communities inspired her to pursue a career in pediatrics. She is passionate about building lasting relationships with families and supporting children through every stage of growth and development.

"We are excited to welcome Dr. Wilson to our team," said Amy Roop, Chief Operating Officer at CRHC. "Expanding access to pediatric care is an important part of our commitment to meeting the healthcare needs of our community. Dr. Wilson's passion for rural healthcare and her dedication to children and families make her a wonderful addition to CRHC."

Dr. Wilson earned both her undergraduate and medical degrees from Creighton University and completed her pediatric residency at Primary Children's Hospital through the University of Utah.

Outside of her medical practice, Dr. Wilson and her husband, Brooks, enjoy raising their four children, traveling, cooking, and spending time on their family farm.

Beginning in mid-November, Dr. Wilson will provide pediatric care at three CRHC clinic locations, offering families convenient access to care close to home. Her clinic schedule will include:

•Bedford Family Health Center – Tuesdays and Thursdays
Phone: 712-523-1146

•Villisca Family Health Center – Wednesdays
Phone: 712-826-3003
